About Us

Locksmith and lock manufacturer Francis Jackson opened Jacksons Locksmithing in Launceston in 1883. At the time, Jackson considered himself the “only practical lock maker in Australasia”.

In 1910, Francis brought son David ‘Syd’ Sydney Jackson into the business, later, his sons W.H. ‘Bill’ Jackson worked locksmithing and gunsmithing for the company, while T.A. ‘Tom’ Jackson was employed as an accountant.

Jacksons expanded into brass works in 1919 and in 1928, the business moved into 106 Cameron St, Launceston. Jacksons established their headquarters there for over 76 years. Jacksons Locksmithing, later Jacksons Security, has become a mainstay in the Tasmanian community, offering a suite of security services beyond traditional locksmithing, proving relevant and reliable in today's modern age.

Master Keying

What is a master keyed system?

A master keyed system provides a number of agreed cylinders/locks that allow different groups or individual key holders to gain access to all or specific defined areas of a building.

What are the benefits of a master keyed system?

A master keyed system provides many benefits to those using them, in particular it allows controlled access across a building. Ensuring that only appropriate people have access to defined parts of the building. The other resounding benefit is that individuals can have access using only a minimum number of keys.

Are there any disadvantages to a master keyed system?

With most security measures the objective is the right balance between convenience and security. A master keyed system can be both convenient and secure.

However, it is important to note that if a master key is lost or stolen the security of the locks that match that activated key is compromised. Additionally whilst locks that accept a large number of different keys can be more vulnerable to picking, the number of break-ins where a cylinder is picked is extremely low. To combat these disadvantages most current master lock designs make lock picking almost impossible.

How flexible is a master keyed system?

A master keyed system is a dynamic entity and Jacksons Security understands that many businesses/organisations change and develop over time. A well organised and planned master keyed system should be able to adapt to the changing requirements of your business/organisation.

Can a master keyed system be installed in phases?

Yes, this is very often the case, particularly when putting master keyed systems into existing buildings. Ideally, the system should be organised, planned and agreed to in its entirety before beginning installation. Possibly even allowing for future expansion and changes, the actual cylinders can then be called for over a period of time to suit budget availability.

Alarm Systems and Alarm Monitoring

Jacksons Security pioneered the use of electronic security to protect a premises with our first monitored alarm system being installed 40 years ago.

Technology has evolved and advanced significantly since that time and although the principles behind the method of protection remain, functionality has become much more user friendly.

For our commercial customers a modern security system can integrate into Building Management Systems and allow our residential customers to open doors, turn on heaters and control electrical equipment from anywhere in the world where their smartphone or tablet can communicate.

Detection devices have also evolved to thwart any potential intruder or unseen risk with a range of motion, smoke, temperature and gas detectors available. The Jacksons Security team will work with you to design, supply, install and commission a system that is perfectly suited to your needs.

Alarm Monitoring is the ongoing service that will ensure your premises has optimum protection.

Through Jacksons Security, you can setup an alarm system to be monitored via monitoring stations that have achieved A1 grading against Australian Standard 2201.

The monitoring station is fully staffed 24 hours a day and the receipt of actioning of your alarm signal is guaranteed. Additionally all phone calls in and out of the monitoring station are recorded to provide verification of how your events are actioned.

Alternatively, Jacksons Security also offer a self-monitoring alarm system for those who don't want to use a monitoring station. This system is flexible so that if you want to go on holidays and switch your monitoring from self-monitored to the monitoring station you are able to do so easily.

THE ALARM IS USELESS IF IT
